

Legalization of documents

+7 499 677-19-60 Ask question zakazapostil-perevod.ru It is important to understand that the translation of any document which is filed in a foreign country does not have any significant legal force until the passage of the official legalization. Because all the documents issued in a certain country have the power directly on the territory of the same state but outside of it no legal power. As to the documents presented abroad almost always follow the translation respectively, and the translation and legalization needs to perform translation. This will allow you to quickly prepare all the documents and reduce the cost of the necessary procedures. There are several ways of legalization of the translation depends in the first place from that in which country will the translation. If a state party to the Hague Convention the procedure is quite simple and boils down to placing the apostille. In other situations, a consular legalization is required which is held in the Consulate of the country for which the document is intended. Our translation center in Moscow always provides comprehensive services for conducting transactions in legalization of documents and also provides high-quality professional translations of any official documentation. Any documents or acts which need to be legalized must be written clearly all quantitative and numerical values written in words. Signatures of officials and seal should be clearly visible. The apostille as a simplified form of legalization can be determined by a special stamp which appears on official documents issued by the departments of the countries-members of Hague Convention 1961 which is able to confirm the signature and seal of the person responsible for issuing the document. Apostille can be put down for his use in a country that has signed the aforementioned Convention abolishing the requirements of legalization of any foreign documents. Instead, use simplified and faster form of the apostille. Russia signed the Convention in may 1992. Before its adoption legalization was legally difficult and long procedure. Thus the introduction of the apostille was released by the Ministry of foreign Affairs of the participating countries from the tedious procedures of consular legalization for establishing the authenticity of the documents. If you plan to use a document issued by another state on the territory of the Russian Federation, he must undergo the procedure of legalization in full accordance with the law. By far the most convenient and versatile method is its notarial certification on the territory of Russia. Our translation center in Moscow offers favorable conditions
