In accordance with the General requirements of the legislation of most countries and with the international rules for the recognition of authenticity or legality of the documents need notarization or legalization. The simplest option is a certification signed by an authorized officer and the seal of the organization which produced the document. To give greater formality and to prevent possible disputes between the parties to an agreement, it is desirable to produce official verification of appropriate documents. The first level is notarization. This is usually sufficient for the presentation of documents within the country. Procedure of confirmation of authenticity of documents out of the country is determined by the applicable international laws. In particular, in 1992 Russia joined the Hague Convention of 1961 which cancels for the member countries of the Convention, the diplomatic requirements of legalization for public documents sent to a particular member country of the Convention. The Convention introduced a unified international certification of documents, Apostille. In accordance with the Convention in some official documents emanating from the institutions and organizations of the Russian Federation shall bear the special stamp of apostille certifying the authenticity of the signature, quality in which the person signing the document and authenticity of the seal or stamp which the document bears. The concept of official document this includes documents coming from the notary of the administrative organs from other authority or officer subordinate to the jurisdiction of a state signature which can be verified by preliminary evidence of its authenticity by a notary. The Convention does not apply to documents committed by consular offices with administrative documents of direct relevance to the customs or commercial operations. The right to affix the stamp Apostille on documents have certain official bodies and officials of each country. Russia's Ministry Of Foreign Affairs. For the submission of documents, the country has not joined the Hague Convention requires notarization, the Consulate of that country located at the location of the documents. Under the text of the document certifying the inscription is made in Russian language, regardless of the fact that the text is in Russian and foreign languages. In the certifying inscription, the official shall provide the full name and the full name of the notarial office or private notary in strict accordance with the name of the imprint stamp.
